CITING IN APA STYLE

APA (or, American Psychological Association) citation style is used primarily in the social sciences, such as psychology, sociology, and criminal justice, but it can also be used for other subjects.

This one-page guide focuses on citing sources in a References page, or bibliography. APA style also dictates how sources are cited in-text (in the body of a paper). The examples in this handout are from the Diana Hacker online guide, and cover the most commonly cited types of sources – books, articles, and websites. For help with in-text citation and citing other types of sources, visit the Hacker website, refer to the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association (available on reserve at the library), or ask a librarian.

BOOKS

With an author:

With an editor or editors:

ARTICLE FROM AN ONLINE DATABASE (e.g. Academic Search Premier)

/jecp.2008.05.007

(If there is no DOI, which stands for ‘Digital Object Identifier,’ include the persistent link URL for the article. Most databases will provide either one or the other.)
ARTICLE FROM A PRINT JOURNAL

ARTICLE FROM A PRINT NEWSPAPER

WEBSITE, OR DOCUMENT FROM A WEBSITE

Websites often do not have the same information as other sources – some have authors for specific articles or pages, others may not. Some have dates on pages or entries, others may only have a copyright date for the whole site. If you’re not sure how to cite a website, ask a librarian for help.

With an author:

With no author:

Questions? Ask a Librarian! reference@fitchburgstate.edu · 978-665-3223 · IM: librariansfsu